Portfolio Management Commentary

Destination Dynamic Income Total Return Fund – AY EUR Dis delivered a monthly performance of +0.05% in November, bringing the year-to-date return to +4.10% and confirming the Fund's ability to preserve capital and generate income in a still challenging market environment.

Once again, the main positive contribution came from the Income strategy, which continues to represent the primary performance driver of the portfolio. Exposure to European corporate bonds, particularly in the financial sector, benefited from still-tight credit spreads, while the Emerging Markets Sovereign bucket added further positive returns, supported by selective positioning across leading Latin American issuers. The Macro strategy had only a marginal impact on performance, whereas risk-hedging (Overlay) activities generated a limited cost during the month but remain essential to prudent risk management at this stage of the cycle.

Against a backdrop of persistent core inflation, the portfolio maintains a defensive stance, consistent with credit spreads near cycle lows and increasing signs of a global macroeconomic slowdown.

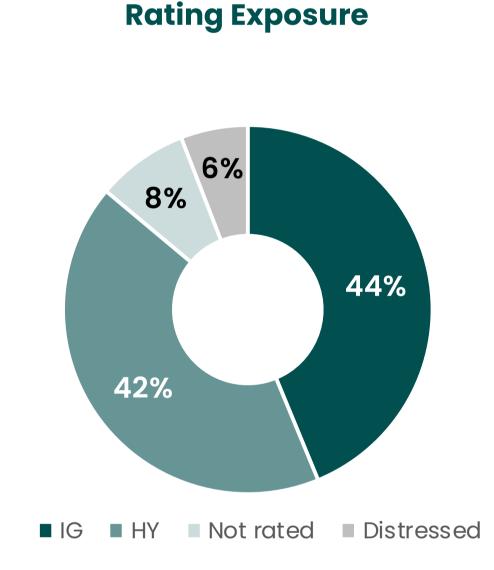

Portfolio duration remains contained at 3.17 years, in line with a cautious and diversified approach aimed at mitigating the impact of rate shocks.

The Sub-Fund also maintains broad geographic diversification — with a predominant exposure to Europe (59%) and a selective allocation to Latin America (14%) – as well as solid overall credit quality (BB+ average rating).

In summary, November was a month of continuity in portfolio management, during which DDI reiterated its role as an investment solution focused on resilient carry, capital protection, and disciplined, gradual performance generation even amid ongoing market volatility.
